Editorial:

One of the challenges when looking at international higher education trends is that it is both an industry and a social movement. Any observer of social change in western society over the past 40 years can see the effect of Marxist lecturers compounding their social agenda on society. The reason many faith (religious) organisations sponsor universities worldwide is they recognise the importance of controlling higher education institutions in the battle for society's ideas.

On the commercial side the largest university in the USA is the University of Phoenix which is a commercial university. Its main commercial rival is Kaplan which has degree granting institutions in several countries. The World Trade Organisation has declared education is an industry under the trade rules.

In most industries as new technologies come along they rapidly spread either decreasing the cost consumers pay or develop the quality of the product being offered. This does not happen in education because the non-commercial (faith, non-profit and public) higher education sector is primarily motivated by spreading ideas rather than either offering the best price or best student learning outcomes. Many societies (correctly) see higher education as a right their citizens should have access to. This requires society to subsidise in some way higher education. This subsidisation of higher education tends to distort the education market.

The main degree awarding bodies operations in most countries are the public and major non-profit universities and their agenda is the spreading of ideas not necessarily the narrow core education knowledge students enroll to obtain. This slows up the change technology brings to this industry and makes predicting the future practical change very difficult.

Dual Degree Programs

St Clements Private Swiss University is registered in a Swiss Canton as a private university. It is not registered with the Swiss National Government and as such like other private Swiss universities it is not listed in the UNESCO World Higher Education Database directory. All of its degrees are issued in co-operation with professional qualification awarding bodies.

In some countries Ministry of Education authorities will only recognise degrees from universities listed on the World Higher Education Database directory. Thus if having a degree listed on the database is vital for you it can be via our dual degree arrangements.

Professional Organisations News

Chartered Professional Bodies (UK and USA)

A Royal Charter is a way of incorporating a body and was originally the only way in the UK a body could become incorporated. With the event of company registrations the granting of Charters is now a rare event. These days Royal Charters are only given to professional bodies which represent a field of activity which is unique and not covered by other professional bodies and the incorporation by Charter is in the public interest.

Once incorporated the body surrenders aspects of its internal control to the Privy Council as Amendments to the Charter and have to be approved by The Queen in Council - in practical terms the Government. A maximum of one or two bodies gain Chartered status per year. In the USA the word "Charter" only needs to be listed in the name of the professional body for it to be called a Chartered Professional Body.

International Association of Business Computing

This professional body (old website address www.iabc.demon.co.uk) appears to have disappeared. Would any reader with information about the IABC please let the editor know at admin@stclements.edu

Guild of Industrial, Commercial & Institutional Accountants

This body was first incorporated in 1956 and obtained a Federal Charter in 1961. It is designed to recognise "in-house" accountants in various Canadian organisations. It offers two grades of membership, Associate and Accredited. Associate membership is available to bookkeepers and students studying an accounting program. Accredited members must have graduated from an approved course and have proven experience.

Catering Institute of Australia

Nearly twenty years ago the Catering Institute of Australia collapsed, members just stopped being asked for fees and other communications stopped. It appears those who were members in Western Australia kept operating and have re-established the Institute there as the Catering Institute of Australia (WA).

The Business Management Association (UK)

The Business Management Association (UK) has re-structured its membership grade five level.

Companion of the Business Management Association (CBMA) membership is only available by invitation from the BMA Council. Fellow of the Business Management Association (FBMA) candidates must have five years proven managerial experience and passed the association's final examination. Member of the Business Management Association (MBMA) candidates must have three years managerial experience and have passed the final examination of the association. Associate of the Business Management Association (ABMA) candidates must have one years proven managerial experience and prove they have qualification suitable for the award. Affiliate of the Business Management Association candidates (AffBMA) candidates must either follow a course of study in pursuit of an award or be studying an equivalent award of another organisation.

They have also established the division of Certified Business Management Accountant that recognises both Fellow Certified and Member Certified levels.

Canadian Institute of Management

The Canadian Institute of Management has announced that it recognises the credentials of members of the Canadian Institute of Certified Administrative Managers. This partnership agreement between these two bodies should strengthen both as Canadian professional bodies.

Institute of Manufacturing Accredits University of Hertfordshire Degree Programs

The Institute of Manufacturing has recently accredited the University Hertfordshire Master of Science in Manufacturing Management and Master of Science in Operations & Supply Chain Management degree programs. Graduates from these programs will be entitled to Fellow membership grade of the Institute. Once they have 2 years manufacturing management experience they will be eligible to apply for the Certified Manufacturing Practitioner Award.
